Bunge and Corn Products Integration: Frequently Asked Questions

September 30, 2008

1. Why are Bunge and Corn Products combining?

Combining with Corn Products is a natural step in Bunge's strategy of entering complementary value chains.

Together, Bunge and Corn Products will create a stronger company with an integrated, global presence in the corn value chain, enhanced product offerings, an expanded presence in important growth geographies and a diversified revenue stream.

Both companies are leaders in their industries. By combining the two companies, we will have the opportunity to develop new customer relationships and strengthen existing ones by offering a broader product portfolio and by integrating distribution.

The goal is to create a larger, stronger and more diverse company with more opportunities for the enterprise and its employees.

2. What is the status of securing regulatory and shareholder approvals for the merger? When is the combination official?

The integration of Bunge and Corn Products is on track for an expected close in the fourth quarter.

The merger has already received anti-trust approval in the U.S. and certain other jurisdictions. We expect to receive remaining, necessary regulatory clearances prior to closing.

We recently set a record date of September 29 (shareholders as of the close of business on that date are eligible to vote on the transaction) and shareholder meetings will likely be held in mid to late November. The official closing should occur shortly after these meetings. In the meantime integration planning will proceed ahead.

3. What happens to the company when the transaction closes?

On the day of the closing Corn Products will become part of Bunge. Corn Products stockholders will become Bunge shareholders, and Corn Products' financial results will be consolidated into Bunge's. Alberto Weisser will be the combined company's chairman and CEO, and Sam Scott will join Bunge's Board of Directors. At the same time, key functions—legal, finance, HR and some commercial teams, for example—will work together closely to ensure that essential activities like financial reporting, payroll and customer contacts are handled smoothly.

4. What changes can employees expect on day one?

Most of the integration plans currently in development will be implemented during 2009. We expect very few changes on day one. Information on changes and their expected timing will be communicated as decisions are made.

5. What are the integration teams working on?

Over 50 teams and subgroups, comprised of employees from both Bunge and Corn Products, are at work analyzing how best to integrate operations for maximum growth and efficiency. The teams are divided into larger groupings: North America; South America; Asia and other regions; Global Growth; and General & Administrative. Within these groupings teams are analyzing topics ranging from distribution to IT, marketing to procurement, legal to R&D, HR, finance and a host of other subjects. Depending on the nature of the local business, regional teams may be focused on different topics.

The integration planning process is being overseen by a Steering Committee comprised of the CEOs, HR heads and CFOs of each company.

The integration teams presented initial findings and ideas to the Steering Committee on September 24. Final recommendations will not be presented until later this year.

It is important to note that the Steering Committee will make the final decisions regarding integration planning. As these decisions are made and can be communicated, the Committee will do so.

The next Steering Committee meetings will be held in October and November.

6. Will there be any reductions in jobs or facility closures? When will we know about these decisions?

This is a combination of two complementary companies, and as such we do not expect there to be significant job reductions or the consolidation of numerous locations.

Integration teams are still at work and the Steering Committee has not reviewed final recommendations or made any final decisions regarding these topics. A clearer idea of the timing of any potential decisions will likely be available after the October and November Steering Committee meetings.

It is important to keep in mind that we are a global company that is growing rapidly, and there may be job opportunities for current employees in other businesses or locations.

7. Will my job responsibilities change on day one or shortly thereafter? What should I tell customers, suppliers, etc.?

Unless otherwise notified, your job responsibilities will stay the same.

As we get closer to the closing of the merger we will provide updated information on how to handle customer, supplier or other inquiries. Until then, Bunge and Corn Products remain independent companies so we should conduct business as usual.

8. Will Corn Products become a division of Bunge or be integrated into Bunge's regional operations?

Teams are still at work analyzing the best way to integrate the companies for maximum growth and efficiency. Decisions on how exactly to combine the operations have not yet been made.

9. What changes, if any, will be made to the Corn Products brand at close?

Corn Products will retain its brand after the merger closes.

10. Can I talk to people at Corn Products about the integration?

For now, Corn Products and Bunge remain separate companies and, as such, employees at Bunge and Corn Products should talk to one another only in the normal course of business or otherwise at the specific direction of the integration teams.

11. How can I get more information and what can I do to contribute?

The integration team will respond to your inquiry directly. If the question is general in nature, the team will ensure that it is included in future FAQ documents so everyone has access to the reply.
